Ending Gun Violence Takes a Different Kind of Bravery

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

Let me get right to it: There is never an easy, unemotional time to talk about gun violence. And if we're serious about saving innocent lives, we're going to need to make some sacrifices, to be brave.

We know the drill. After every mass shooting, we're reminded not to politicize the wounding and deaths of students and teachers by talking about how to stop it, to wait until passions cool, ostensibly out of respect for the grieving. Then the camera crews leave town and we move on to other things.

But students at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida, where a former classmate killed 17 people and wounded 14 others with an AR-15 semi-automatic rifle, are not waiting. They are seizing their moment in front of the cameras and at rallies, as 18-year-old Emma Gonzales did over the weekend, to demand gun control.

That they are so young and still in the throes of grief and reeling from what they've experienced, that their voices are so raw, is part of their power. It's also what will allow some to dismiss them as emotional and too close to the issue.

It's been nearly 30 years since at the age of 16 I lost someone I loved, shot by strangers who were teenagers themselves. And I have not cooled off. People who've lost a loved one to murder will tell you the grief doesn't end, exactly. It thins out — more for some than others — into a kind of film, touching every experience with an absence that will always be wrong. Those of us who live with that kind of loss can't afford to wait until we can have esoteric discussions about gun violence, or for even more people to lose someone so they feel it as sharply, doing the grim math of multiplying their own grief by the number of newly dead.

Call that bias, if you like. It changes nothing. The statistics remain the same. We are not safer with more guns. According to a New York Times article citing a study out of the University of Alabama, "America's gun homicide rate was 33 per million people in 2009, far exceeding the average among developed countries. In Canada and Britain, it was 5 per million and 0.7 per million, respectively, which also corresponds with differences in gun ownership." This despite similar crime rates between the U.S. and Britain — and no, the study found no correlation relating to population diversity or rates of mental illness. Rather unsurprisingly, rates of mass shootings in the countries studied also climbed with increased gun ownership.

But this is not about statistics. If it was, we wouldn't be racking up 10.2 gun deaths per 100,000 people in 2010 according to the American Journal of Medicine. We'd have gone the way of the U.K., which banned private ownership of handguns, semiautomatic rifles and pump-action shotguns and registered shotgun owners and lowered its annual gun deaths to .2 per 100,000. If we were making cold, dispassionate judgements, we would have copied Australia, which after banning semi-automatic rifles and pump-action shotguns, and restricting gun ownership saw one gun death per 100,000 people. We'd have followed Japan, with its ban on handguns and its rigorous vetting and testing for shotguns and air rifles. It scored a 0 per 100,000, but its annual gun deaths hover around 10 people. Keep in mind hunting and target shooting haven't been outlawed in any of these countries.

I lived in Tokyo, the world's most populous city with 38 million people, for a decade without hearing a single gunshot. My children only took part in school drills for earthquakes. We brought our kids back to the U.S. after the 2011 Fukushima nuclear power plant meltdown. Sometimes I wonder if we made the safest choice.

No, gun violence and gun control are not about hard numbers, unless we're talking about polling numbers for gun voters or campaign donations from the National Rifle Association. It's about emotion and gut feeling: who we think we are, what makes us feel safe and what we're willing to sacrifice.

After every mass shooting news outlets and public officials alike laud the dead and wounded who sacrificed themselves, shielding the bodies of others with their own, like Sonny Melton, a nurse who died saving his wife in Las Vegas. Or Jason Josaphat, who died putting himself between a stranger and a bullet at the Pulse nightclub. Or Aaron Feis, the Stoneman Douglas football coach killed shielding students from gunfire. And now some are suggesting teachers, the folks we can't seem to pay or supply well enough, carry weapons and be the oft-theorized but seldom realized "good guy with a gun." (In its study of 160 mass shootings that left 486 dead, the FBI found only one successful intervention by an armed private citizen who was not a security guard.)

Maybe we're asking for the wrong kind of sacrifice. I won't pretend we won't lose anything giving up easy access to firearms. We would have to let go of some deeply rooted ideas of who we are and how we keep ourselves and each other safe.

I want to believe that most of us would throw ourselves in front of a bullet to protect a child or victim of domestic violence or a stranger — that we'd sacrifice. But if we're going to stem the bloody tide of gun violence, what we need to sacrifice is part of our culture, to trade our romanticized image of armed heroism for something quieter: the laying down of arms, letting go of our national stockpile of guns in order to protect our most vulnerable. We need to surrender the false feeling of security that comes with access to guns, to be brave enough to put down the weapons that are failing our most vulnerable. That's how we're going to save children, the battered, the people we may never meet — from a distance and every day, with no shootouts and no medals.

It might not feel heroic to you yet. Let yourself think about it in the abstract, to look at the numbers and the studies with as cold an eye as you can. Don't take too long, though. The numbers won't stop climbing and chances are you're going to feel it soon enough.

Declare a Crisis

Editor:
Linda Stansberry's article "Crisis Delayed" (Feb. 7) speaks to the county Board of Supervisors' postponement yet again of a declaration of a shelter crisis for Humboldt. The evidence of an overwhelming problem with our homeless population is apparent in all districts of Humboldt. The declaration of a shelter crisis would increase the availability of possible sites for emergency shelters by easing zoning restrictions.

The Humboldt chapter of the Buddhist Peace Fellowship strongly advocates for an immediate shelter crisis declaration with strong, effective language that would produce results. Also, we agree with a creation of a task force to investigate affordable housing trust funding, which is also recommended by Supervisors Bohn and Fennell. Affordable housing is a priority that has been adopted by the Board of Supervisors under the Housing First policy and addresses an issue that affects the whole state. However the immediate creation of emergency shelters to help with the homeless, many of whom are veterans or individuals dealing with mental and/or physical health issues, including addiction, without any family support requires urgent action.

The current projects for affordable housing in Eureka are commendable but do not touch the enormity of the situation within others areas of the county or even Eureka. Linda Stansberry reports that Supervisor Bohn has emphasized the importance of private citizens, faith groups and NGO's working to address homelessness. This is reminiscent of Pres. George

Bush Sr.'s comment about the "thousand points of light" which emphasized the importance of volunteerism. It is true that community involvement is necessary to deal with this issue. The Buddhist Peace Fellowship would like to encourage concerned, compassionate citizens to write their supervisors before the Feb. 27 board meeting to suggest that the county needs to be a main contributor to those thousand points of light and that a declaration of a shelter crisis would be a step forward to addressing the homelessness problem.

5th district supervisorial races have significant financial advantages over their opponents. Supervisor Bass and Supervisor Sundberg at the end of January had contributions totaling 87 percent of the total amount of money raised for all candidates. I would like to encourage people who support a change in the present make-up of the Board of Supervisors to think about contributing to or helping out with the campaigns of one or more of these candidates: Steve Madrone is running against Supervisor Ryan Sundberg in the 5th District; competing for Virginia Bass's seat are Mary Ann Lyons and Danielle Burkhart. The opponents all have either websites and/or Facebook pages which can be accessed to get more information on how to help or to donate. In addition the North Coast People's Alliance (NCPA) has scheduled canvasses to assist both local and statewide candidates whom its membership has endorsed. NCPA, too, has a website and Facebook page with more information on its efforts.

For the Glory!

Editor:

We are excited about the opportunity for change on our town plaza. The movement is strong to change the McKinley statue to something more reflective of our current community.

The idea of replacing the existing statue with a kinetic sculpture has been proposed. We are building on this concept, hoping to make it more relevant and widely supported.

We suggest the commissioning of a new piece of public art. The specific requirements would include melting down the existing McKinley statue, then reusing its metal to create a kinetic sculpture. This repurposing would be a primary component of the new work, an exchange symbolic of our area's environmental and artistic stance.

A kinetic sculpture would give liveliness to the square, drawing locals and tourists alike. The Kinetic Grand Championship has become nationally known as a fun and innovative component of Humboldt County. We see an opportunity to emphasize this positive aspect of our public image. Turning the old statue into something new could be an example in the ongoing debate about the many politically charged statues throughout our nation, generating good publicity for our area. We would reference the past and require the installation of a plaque with a statement of intent, including relevant history.

This could be community-driven project. A call to artists could be widely

A Display of Tragedy

Editor:

There have been many mass shootings in recent years; the largest being the Las Vegas shooting last fall with 59 fatalities and another 422 injured and the most recent being the high school shooting in Parkland, Florida, with 17 dead. Each time there has been public outrage calling for Congressional action to limit access to assault rifles. But Congress can't agree on how to respond. Those on the right see this as a mental health issue. They are willing to offer support for the affected families and survivors. The minority on the left responds with "enough already" and seeks Congressional action to address the issue of assault rifle access head on. So nothing changes. Support is offered with flags flown at half-staff for a few days while the matter soon disappears from Congressional attention. But I think that Congress has been getting off too easy. I propose that all members of Congress be required to wear a two-color black-green armband after each shooting for the same number of days as there were people killed and injured. The black is to acknowledge all victims and the green is to remind Congress members that it's time to get going and do something. If this measure were adopted retroactive to last fall, all members of Congress would be wearing armbands well into 2019 at a minimum. With this constant reminder, perhaps the two sides could actually work together and come up with a joint approach to address the mass shooting problem before then.

Local veterans learn to train their own service animals

By Linda Stansberry

linda@northcoastjournal.com

Squirt is impatient. The young dachshund wriggles in his owner's arms as she gets out of the car and slowly crosses the parking lot of the Eureka Elk's Lodge. Waiting for the pair in the breezeway are a line of chairs and a group of people from both the Elk's club and the Eureka Veteran's Affairs Clinic. The two organizations have collaborated to offer a free training course for local veterans so their dogs can become certified companion animals.

Crystal Ray, Squirt's owner, has her doubts. Ray is attending the class on behalf of her husband, Randolph, a retired Army sergeant who is partially bed-ridden. Ray winces a little as Squirt strains at the leash, smelling the beef heart local dog trainer Delilah Huck uses for obedience exercises.

"Oh, he's cute!" says Kelly Stephens, the member services coordinator for the VA Clinic. Her husband, Casey, is the Vets Committee chair for the Elk's Lodge.

"We can't get no sit or stay or nothing out of him," replies Ray, who is slightly out of breath. The group laughs. Squirt, she says, is a big comfort to Randolph. She hopes to teach her husband some of what she learns at the class. Squirt is joined by his classmate Calvin, an 18-month-old mystery breed that his owner, Army Sgt. Angela Rich, believes is half pitbull and half lab. Calvin is well-mannered and curious, eager to please. He seems a little intimidated by Squirt, who is now growling from Ray's lap. Squirt turns up the volume when the final attendee of the class, Nicolai, a 15-month-old Black Russian terrier, arrives.

Nikki, as his owners Jack and Pam Jones call him, is simply massive, a doofy bear of an animal whose shoulders almost reach those of Jack Jones in his wheelchair. He was chosen specifically as a service dog for Jones, a Vietnam War veteran and Marine sergeant who founded the local Vet's Center. Once trained, Nikki will be able to help his owner get up from the chair. Today, however, the young dog is just curious about the treats and other dogs, dancing a bit on his leash as Pam Jones tries to keep him away from Squirt, who is now lunging as Ray shushes him.

Huck calls the class to order a little after 6 p.m., instructing the owners to fill their pockets with pieces of beef heart. The treats were donated by Kelly Stephens and Deborah Reeves, who is a licensed clinical social worker at the VA Clinic. Reeves, sitting nearby, will be in attendance for the entire six-week class to assist veterans with any emotional issues that come up during the training. Stephens says removing the financial barriers to the training was key in helping local veterans attend the class. The Elks National Foundation paid for Huck's services and the dogs' necessary vaccinations. Once the veterans and their dogs complete the course, some will be eligible to enroll in formal training at Canine Companions for Independence, a service dog academy in Santa Rosa. The VA Clinic and the Elks plan to launch a sponsorship program to finance academy attendees, depending on how many qualify.

Today, however, the first order of business is learning how to sit.

Huck explains the basics. Begin with the pooch already sitting. Say the command, but just once so as not to confuse him or her. Hold the treat to your chest. Once the dog is paying attention and staying in place, it gets the treat, with the words, "Good sit."

"If the dog's butt comes up, the food goes away," says Huck, a McKinleyville-based instructor who has been teaching obedience classes for 30 years.

While Jack Jones watches from his wheelchair, Pam holds Nikki's leash. The big dog already knows some commands but not the traditional sit and stay. Rather, the Joneses use military terms such as "at ease," "stand down" and "crouch."

"At ease," says Pam Jones. Nikki obediently plops his butt on the concrete and receives a treat.

a few more simple exercises then moves on to Calvin, who has been watching curiously from the sidelines. He, too, responds well to the technique, staying in place as Rich moves from side to side with the treat. Everyone applauds, which makes the dogs bark.

Stephens says she hopes to have more dogs and veterans in the next class. At some point, her husband, an Afghanistan war veteran, will be joining the group with his young German rottweiler, Bastogne. Stephens herself was stationed in San Diego for much of the war, working in the amphibious assault division. Her eyes well up a little bit as she describes the positive impact service animals can have on veterans with physical and emotional wounds from combat.

"My husband has PTSD, he had an IED blow up on him," she says. "He gets so much support from his dog. It really helps."

Once trained, Bastogne, named after a famous World War II siege, will help Casey Stephens with his anxiety and Post Traumatic Stress Disorder, as well as helping lift him if he falls due to his knee injury. The couple also has a "very smart" red Queensland heeler, Bandit. Stephens says workers at the clinic are currently seeing a surge in young veterans from the ongoing wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, many of them suffering from Post Traumatic Stress Disorder and struggling to use available services.

"Social impairment is a huge one for our vets that are coming back right now," Stephens says.

Stephens and her colleagues want to help fill in some of the gaps to help veterans live full lives. A properly trained service dog may mean better companionship, better help, better access to housing and the ability to take an emotional or physical service animal into offices, restaurants and planes.

Finally, it's Squirt's turn. Huck places a chair in front of Ray so the small dog can stay there without strain on his owner's back. Squirt, smelling the food, is excited.

"Get his attention," Huck says. Ray tells him to sit, holding a piece of the beef heart to her chest. When Squirt's bottom is on the chair, he gets the treat. The pair repeat the ritual several times, although both Ray and Squirt become impatient.

"He's trying really hard for you," says Huck.

"I've been trying really hard, too," says Ray. "I've been working with him."

At the end of the session, the dachshund is sitting like a pro, looking up at Ray with big limpid eyes as she praises him with a "good sit." Calvin and Nikki are standing by, wondering when it will be their turn to again be praised and rewarded. Across the parking lot, a border collie sitting in the cab of a pickup truck barks in frustration. In future classes, the veterans and their companions will move on to more complex commands, learning to lie down, walk on a loose lead, greet without jumping and go to their beds. Properly trained, service dogs can help their owners know when it's safe to cross a street, predict seizures and assist people onto mobility devices. That's all in the future for these dogs and their veterans, however. Tonight, everyone applauds Squirt. ●

Sessions v. Everyone

Briefs from cannabis news
across the country

By Linda Stansberry
linda@northcoastjournal.com

Here's (almost) everything that's happening in cannabis-related news, near and far.

Bill v. Memo

As things in Washington grow ever more hyper-partisan, it seems important to take note when Democrats and Republicans actually seem willing to meet in the middle, such as the recent introduction of the "Sensible Enforcement of Cannabis Act" brought by Reps. Lou Correa (D-Calif.) and Matt Gaetz (R-Fla.). The bill would essentially codify the language in the Cole Memo, approved by President Barack Obama in 2013, which created a "hands-off" approach to federal enforcement of marijuana laws. Cannaphobic U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions rescinded that memo in January, sparking concern among advocates and industry folks that federally-funded law enforcement might be swooping down on state-legal crops, farmers and distributors.

In his statement, Correa cited the "great uncertainty" that Sessions' actions had caused for citizens and legal cannabis businesses. Goetz expressed his dismay with the original Cole Memo, referring to it as "bad governance."

"We are a nation of laws, not department-wide memos," Goetz said when introducing the bill.

The Florida rep cited his experience watching residents of his state receive the benefit of medical marijuana, and called upon President Donald Trump to uphold a non-interference policy with regard to cannabis. The bill, should it make its way into law, would potentially satisfy the small-government ethos of Republicans like Goetz, as well as easing the angst of folks in green states.

Cash v. Credit

If you're sick of having to stop by the ATM before heading to the dispensary, a solution might be on the horizon. A new debit app, CanPay, sidesteps the hurdle of federal banking laws that have prohibited major card companies like Visa and Mastercard from working with cannabis retailers. The free app acts as a debit card, generating a QR code for retailers to scan.

State v. Venue

Humboldt Green, organizer of the trade festival Cannifest, announced last week that this year's event, which was scheduled to be held at Redwood Acres Fairground on May 5 and 6, has been indefinitely postponed. Stephen Geider, Humboldt Green's founder, said this came after his organization was unable to reconcile the venue's guidelines with the new, stricter state guidelines around cannabis events.

"A lot of it has to do with children on the premises," Geider told the Journal. "Now these are only 21-and-over events. [Redwood Acres uses] their fairgrounds for all kinds of businesses. They have kids coming and going, doing karate throughout the weekend. They're interested in putting up a fence, creating a boundary, but the state says you can't do that."

Because the state's regulations for cannabis events were dropped so late in 2017, Geider told the Journal it gave his organization very little time to recruit vendors and work out if potential venues would be in compliance. He sounds optimistic that the event will be on the books somewhere, sometime this year and also suggested that in 2019 it may go on the road, booking fairgrounds elsewhere in the state.

Berkeley v. Sessions

In news that will surprise absolutely no one, Berkeley's mayor, Jesse Arreguin, has signed into law a resolution declaring Berkeley a "cannabis sanctuary city," meaning that city officials are prohibited from using city money or resources to assist with federal prosecution of legal cannabis businesses.●

Fixing a Broken System

The Humboldt County Department of Health and Human Services and Sheriff's Office have agreed to a series of overhauls after a California Attorney General's Office investigation found serious lapses in the local child abuse reporting system.

Under the stipulated judgement approved by a judge last week, DHHS' Child Welfare Services and the sheriff's office are required to make what the attorney general's office described as "extensive corrective measures across multiple government agencies to ensure that every report of child abuse and neglect is investigated by one or both agencies in a timely manner."

Those include setting up a 24/7 emergency phone line screened by social workers to take calls about suspected neglect and abuse, ensuring timely cross reporting among agencies, establishing a community task force and the development and implementation of a joint tracking system.

Additionally, CWS is to revise its policies and procedures to "ensure collaboration with and input relating to decision making from tribes."

The judgement notes that DHHS and the sheriff's office worked cooperatively with the attorney general's office and "have affirmed their commitment to make meaningful changes to how child abuse and neglect reports are handled in Humboldt County."

"The institutions of Humboldt County entrusted to protect children failed them," Attorney General Xavier Becerra said in a statement. "What can be more important than public agencies performing their duties to safeguard the security and welfare of our kids? We owe it to our children to enforce these laws vigorously."

This stipulated judgment will keep the spotlight on Humboldt County's implementation of system-wide reforms to protect children from abuse and neglect."

According to court documents, the attorney general's investigation launched in 2015 found both agencies put children's well-being at risk by either failing to follow up on neglect and abuse reports or not conducting investigations in a timely manner as required under California's Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act and state welfare code.

That included the lack of a 24/7 emergency response system for CWS social workers to take calls — the main way abuse and neglect reports are made — with mandated reporters like teachers, as well as concerned citizens, forced to leave messages and often not receiving calls back for "days, weeks, or months, if at all," court documents filed by the attorney general's office state.

The court documents also state that "there were occasions when deputies did not respond to community calls for assistance or complete case reports" because the sheriff's office did not have policies and procedures in place, and that CWS "did not investigate referrals in a timely manner."

For example, the investigation found that in 2015 CWS "only made timely first face-to-face contact within the 10-day statutory period 64 percent of the time" and took an average of 97 days to complete an investigation, exceeding the mandatory 30-day requirement.

"From 2010 to 2015, more than half of all screen-in referrals took 63 days or more to close, with a number of referrals that were left open for years," the court documents state.

The two agencies also did not have a co-operative agreement for handling reports or sharing information, which was mainly done via fax but only monitored during business hours with CWS routinely sending cross reports from the entire week to the sheriff's office late Friday afternoon.

Under the stipulated judgment, DHHS and the sheriff's office have set time frames for addressing those lapses and others and are required to retain a third-party monitor to ensure compliance.

Humboldt County Sheriff William Honsal said in a release that the process has strengthened his office's "communication and teamwork" with CWS, noting that "protecting the children of the county is the highest priority."

"Our new communications system and joint response protocol will ensure that mandated reports of child abuse and neglect are quickly investigated and that children are protected," he said.

DHHS Director Connie Beck said the agreement builds on efforts that were already underway to modernize the CWS system.

"Staff inherited an inefficient paper-and-pencil system that they've had to work with for many years. I'm grateful for their commitment to systems improvement and, ultimately, to the children and families we serve," she said.

In the Wind

Can offshore wind energy reshape the future of Humboldt County?

As legalized recreational cannabis takes hold in California, some Humboldt County officials think the local economy's future isn't tied to farms in the hills. It might be in the wind.

A triad of factors has state and local officials, as well as energy companies, increasingly excited about the potential of offshore wind energy in Humboldt County, with the hope it could become a hub for the emerging renewable energy technology, transforming the local electric grid into 100 percent renewable energy while creating hundreds of jobs and revitalizing the port. Redwood Coast Energy Authority Executive Director Matthew Marshall says that while wind energy is nothing new, its local potential is.

"Frankly, we've got pretty much the best offshore wind resource in the entire country," he says, adding that the North Coast has the kind of consistent, strong winds that make wind energy companies salivate. "The wind has always been there and that's been known."

What's historically ruled the North Coast out of wind energy discussions, Marshall says, is that the waters off the local coast "get too deep, too quick," meaning the wind turbines used in shallow waters off the East Coast and elsewhere won't work off the Humboldt County coastline. But a new floating platform technology is proving to be a game changer.

The technology, which involved massive, 750-plus-foot-tall wind turbines fixed to partially submerged barges or platforms that are then tethered to the ocean floor, is proving viable, with the first full-scale deep water wind farm opening off the coast of Scotland last fall, after nearly a decade of pilot tests. State officials in California, which passed Senate Bill 350 in 2015 pledging the state to transition to 50 percent renewable energy by 2030, have taken notice and begun looking at offshore wind as a viable option for reshaping the state's electric grid.

"Three years ago, offshore wind energy wasn't in our thought process," said California Energy Commission Renewable Energy Integration Specialist Michael Sokol at a recent meeting convened by RCEA.

"Three years ago, offshore wind energy wasn't in our thought process."

He made clear that it is now. Part of what's tantalizing about offshore wind for state officials is its potential balance with the state's existing solar infrastructure. While solar energy production peaks at midday and vanishes at sunset, offshore wind would see its highest production in the late afternoon and evening, lessening the need for energy storage.

With California officials feeling an urgency to find renewable technologies that could work on a large scale and the emerging floating platform technology making the Pacific Coast potentially viable for offshore wind, eyes turned to the Central Coast. While the wind potential down south isn't as strong as off the North Coast, its proximity to population centers and energy infrastructure made the location a natural fit. State and federal officials were busy last summer conducting hearings and outreach on a lease application for a wind farm near San Luis Obispo until the U.S. Navy quietly threw a wrench in those plans back in August, signaling that it would veto the application because it could interfere with military testing operations. But the Navy didn't stop there, deeming the entire coastline from Los Angeles to north of Big Sur — more than 35,000 square miles — off limits.

That left Humboldt County as one of the only viable candidates for potential sites. In addition to getting the crucial OK from the Navy, Humboldt Bay is the only port in the northern stretch of the state that would be able to bring the huge turbines into port for maintenance, as they are too tall to clear the bridges of the San Francisco Bay.

“These things are huge,” said Scott Morgan, a deputy director of administration in Gov. Jerry Brown’s office at the recent RCEA meeting. “The blades on them are monsters.”

Seemingly all of a sudden, the California Energy Commission began pointing energy companies toward Humboldt Bay.

At that point, Marshall says, RCEA had already entered into a partnership with Principal Power Inc., a technology and services provider for the offshore deep water wind energy market based in the Bay Area, to assess the potential of offshore wind energy. As the community choice aggregator for Humboldt County, RCEA has a clear stake in the outcome of the process and Marshall says the agency also wanted to ensure a local entity is involved in the process and conversations in order to retain some local control and ensure Humboldt doesn’t end up at the whim of a large, multi-national energy company.

But when news of the Navy’s veto of the majority of California’s coast became public, Marshall says things kicked into high gear. RCEA is now circulating a request for qualifications, looking for other entities with the “needed technical and financial” means to help cooperatively develop Humboldt County’s offshore wind infrastructure. The agency hopes to find partners by the end of March.

Marshall says, the plan is to start small with a farm consisting of 10 to 15 wind turbines located 20 to 30 miles offshore, with the potential to scale up. For the moment, there isn’t much incentive to go larger than that, Marshall says, as the infrastructure to connect Humboldt County to the rest of the state’s electric grid doesn’t exist, meaning it can’t export excess electricity.

Changing that would require either extending high-capacity power lines east through Trinity County to connect with the state grid in Cottonwood or building an undersea transport system to the south. Both would come with price tags in

30 miles offshore, Wheeler says there aren’t the concerns about harm to bald eagles, golden eagles and bats that onshore wind farms bring. But there are some concerns about impacts to pelagic birds and marine life. Most notably, Wheeler says there is the question of whether the vibrations or sounds from the windmills would affect migrating whales along the coast, which is currently unknown. Wheeler also says he’s heard concerns that the floating platforms could attract sea birds by becoming “reef-like” ecosystems that draw fish and, consequently, feeding birds that would then get caught in the propellers.

“There are some concerns but we’re at the investigation stage right now, and I fully support the investigation,” he says. “I think this could be a great thing for Humboldt. This could be really cool.”

Humboldt Bay Harbor District CEO Larry Oetker says the topic of an offshore wind farm has been on his radar since he stepped into the job in December. If things the hundreds of millions of dollars.

While the conversation is entirely speculative at this point, it has local officials abuzz at the potential.

As the executive director of the Environmental Protection Information Center, Tom Wheeler jokes that he’s often in the position of playing bad cop and shooting holes in development ideas. But not in this case.

“So far, we’ve been really excited about the conversation,” he says, making clear there is still lots of information to be gathered and many questions to be answered. “It seems like we could have good, blue collar jobs and clean renewable energy from this project. It’s just making sure we do it in a way that minimizes impacts to wildlife.”

The wildlife impacts question seems a hard one to answer, as there’s been minimal study on the issue so far. At 20 to move forward, Oetker says, it would necessitate infrastructure improvements in the bay. Currently, he says, the bay entrance is deep enough and wide enough to accommodate barges pulling the wind turbines into port for maintenance and repairs.

The problem is the docks in the bay — all of which were built primarily for loading and unloading wood products — can’t handle the weight of the turbines, which run some 500 tons. But rebuilding one of the bay’s docks to accommodate that kind of tonnage, along with the hoists needed to move things of that size, could create a host of other shipping possibilities.

“That would open up a whole container world to us, having containers come in and out of the port,” Oetker says.

While at least initially the turbines themselves would be shipped to the North Coast, Marshall says, there would need to be local maintenance and repair crews, which would create some jobs. But if the farm proves successful and scales up, there's the potential for the large-scale creation of well-paying jobs locally.

The port of Grimsby in England used to be home to one of the world's largest fishing fleets back in the 1950s, but declines in fisheries and territorial squabbles over the waters of neighboring countries have largely decimated it, sending the city into a deep economic slump and one of the nation's highest unemployment rates. But about a decade ago, energy companies came calling about offshore wind.

“To be truthful, it sounded a load of rubbish,” Port Chief Martin Boyers told Public Radio International. “It's turned out to be very good for us.”

According to the PRI report, the offshore wind boom has resulted in the creation of thousands of jobs, with more on the way as England looks to ramp up its use of renewable energy in the coming decades. In addition to the technicians and maintenance workers needed to keep the wind farms up and running, Grimsby has welcomed a number of factories that manufacture the massive turbines, which have hand-made blades that weigh 30 tons and stretch 250 feet long.

If the pilot project gets up and running and does well, Marshall says, there's similar potential in Humboldt County. He says he can envision wind power companies buying up land on the Samoa Peninsula — which is designated as a free trade zone and comes with some special tax benefits to companies located there — and producing turbines locally. Further, he says, there's the potential for numerous licensed farms along the Northern California and Oregon coasts, with Humboldt Bay serving as the production and maintenance hub.

“If the sector really takes off, then there's that potential next phase,” he says.

But that's all putting the cart way before the horse. Marshall says RCEA is currently meeting with stakeholders and gather public input, having already met with representatives of the fishing industry, local governments, environmental groups and local tribes.

So far the feedback has been invaluable and largely supportive, Marshall says. As an example, he says fishermen balked at the initial proposal to locate the farm 15 to 20 miles off shore, saying 15 “would be horrible,” but were fine with it being 20 to 30 miles out, so RCEA adjusted plans accordingly. The added distance, Marshall says, will also mean the turbines will be even less visible from shore. Spotting them, he says, will be somewhat like trying to find the smoke stack on the old pulp mill while standing on Trinidad Head. “Getting 20 to 30 miles off the coast, you're going to be lucky to be able to see it on a clear day with binoculars," he says.

Having already gathered a lot of stakeholder input, RCEA will now begin to reaching out to the general public. To that end, Marshall says the agency has a pair of informal public information sessions planned — from 4 to 7 p.m. on March 5 at the Social Club in Samoa and March 6 at Plaza Grill — when folks can drop in, have a snack and a beverage and learn more about the project.

Meanwhile, RCEA hopes to identify partners with an eye on hitting the ground running on a proposal this spring. But Marshall warns the process will be slow. Once RCEA has partnerships in place and its ducks in a row, it will begin the lease process with the Bureau of Ocean Management by submitting an application. If the bureau deems there's competitive interest — which seems likely in this case — it would put the lease out to auction. Once a high bidder secures the rights, the project would then undergo studies, evaluations, site plans and environmental review.

"We have to plan to plan, then comes the planning, then reviewing the plan," he says. "There are going to be countless phases of permitting and planning." ●

This New Year started differently from previous ones: I made a resolution. I also read about New Year's resolutions and their meager chances for surviving January's cold. I decided to ignore the naysayers and plow on.

My New Year's resolution is to add weight training to my exercise routine. Like broccoli, weight training is good for me. Unlike beloved broccoli, though, I find weight training rather unpalatable. On Jan. 1, I started talking about it; I went public with my commitment and plan to follow through. To make it attainable, I started with a small dose: 15 minutes once a week.

In reality, the actual "thing" is less scary than the thought of it, like cooking with an unfamiliar ingredient. Which takes me to my wariness about cooking with tofu. I like tofu but for years I was a little intimidated and made excuses for not preparing it, until one day I decided to change the situation. The immediate impetus for cooking with tofu was a virtual culinary tour I embarked upon with a group of food bloggers. When the tour stopped in China, I read some recipes that intrigued me, borrowed a few elements from them, added some personal preferences and prepared some tofu. Not only did I survive cooking but loved the dish and have been making it ever since.

So, in the still New-ish Year, I invite you to choose a vegetable, cut of meat, fish or other ingredient that intimidates you, find a recipe the appeal of which is greater than your apprehension and go for it. If tofu is that ingredient, below is the recipe that freed me from fear.

I marinate the drained tofu in tamari or low sodium soy sauce flavored with fresh ginger and Chinese five-spice powder (a blend of cinnamon, cloves, fennel, star anise and Szechwan peppercorns). I then cook the tofu and cremini mushrooms. The reward is a delightful dish that you can serve as either an entrée or a side dish, over noodles, rice or other grains (the photo shows it served with quinoa) and/

or with a lively salad. I also like it at room temperature and recently I brought it with me on a flight: It beat anything on the airline menu.

Marinated Tofu with Mushrooms

Serves 2-3.

Ingredients:

7 ounces extra-firm organic tofu
2 tablespoons tamari or low sodium soy sauce
1/4 teaspoon rice vinegar
2 teaspoons grated fresh ginger
1 garlic clove, peeled and minced
1/4 teaspoon Chinese five-spice powder
7 ounces cremini mushrooms
1 ounce shallot
2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil, divided
1 teaspoon toasted sesame oil
1 tablespoon minced fresh flat-leaf parsley as topping

Drain the tofu and wrap it in a clean kitchen towel or napkin. Let stand for 30 minutes.

In a small bowl, prepare the marinade by whisking the tamari or soy sauce, rice vinegar, ginger, garlic clove and Chinese five-spice powder.

Cut the tofu into 1/2-inch cubes, place them in a shallow dish and pour the marinade on it. Toss gently and let rest for 30 minutes.

Clean and thinly slice the mushrooms. Remove the tofu and put the mushrooms in the dish with the marinade. Thinly slice the shallot.

Heat a wok or frying pan over medium heat, add 1 tablespoon of the olive oil and the sesame oil, and swirl it around. Add the tofu and stir-fry for 2-3 minutes, then transfer it from the wok to a bowl and set it aside.

Heat the remaining tablespoon of olive oil, add the shallot to the wok and stir-fry for 1 minute. Add the mushrooms, scraping the dish that held them to add the remaining marinade. Stir-fry for 1 minute, then lower the heat slightly and cook for 3-4 minutes until the mushrooms have softened, stirring almost continuously.

Add the tofu back to the wok and cook gently for 1-2 minutes. Remove from the heat. Sprinkle with the parsley, toss and serve immediately. ●

A Tale of Young Grief

J. Lynn Bailey's Standing Sideways

By JoAnn Bauer

reviews@northcoastjournal.com

Fortuna author J. Lynn Bailey's emotional second YA novel begins with the death of Jasper Stone. His twin sister Livia is plunged into a grief so profound that she finds herself clutching at anything that will dull her pain, even for a moment. Having lived a rather sheltered life, 17-year-old Liv can't find the inner resources she needs to cope with the situation in which she finds herself. She has always been the easy child, the good student and the undemanding friend. Suddenly, her world is ripped apart and none of it means anything to her anymore.

As Liv finds herself falling into increasingly reckless situations, most of her waking time is spent trying to hide her compulsions from those around her. Keeping secrets in a small town is difficult at best and it's complicated by the frequent text messages from a mysterious blogger who seems to have everyone's number.

On the plus side, Liv does have a support system of sorts: the voice of her dead grandmother (real or imagined), Cao, her best friend since childhood and her parents — if only she can bring herself to forgive them for past failures.

And then there's Daniel, the new high school student from England. He's tall and rangy with a diffident manner, a great sense of humor and a killer accent. There are definitely teen hormones at play here but there's also a deeper connection. Daniel brings something that Livia desperately needs. Since he never knew Jasper, he sees Liv as a whole person in her own right, instead of the remaining half of a shattered twin unit.

Liv is a sympathetic character and though it's difficult to watch her making reckless decisions, the first-person narrative allows the reader to sense the desperation of her despair. This is a compelling story and will resonate with anyone who has suffered the loss of a loved one. Standing Sideways can also be read as a cautionary tale about the dangers of stifling feelings and refusing to admit to the consequences of one's actions.

In her acknowledgements and a note to the reader, Bailey says this book was part of her own journey of grief after the loss of her cousin Jason Johnson in a mass shooting at Umpqua Community College in 2015. All the profits of this book are going to a College of the Redwoods scholarship established in Johnson's name.

Preach, Manic Street Preachers

By Collin Yeo

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

As I write this, I am watching the snow melt on my porch in the early afternoon of a bank holiday Monday. What could be more wholesome and Peanuts-esque than snow on President's Day? Well, how about living in a country where children don't get slaughtered at school on Valentine's Day? All because a group of the wealthiest people on the planet since the pharaohs have convinced a bunch of smooth-brained rubes that "well-regulated" means that nearly everyone can get their very own murder machines. Our American big-boy hobby equals death on an almost unimaginable scale in this country and it needs to stop. Yes, people do kill people and, yes, they will continue to do so despite any attempt at regulation from the G-men. However, they will have a much harder time doing so on the level seen in Florida last week or in Las Vegas last October without access to assault weapons. And cops shouldn't have them either but that's a different story for another time. Don't want the only people with guns to be criminals? Then stop voting for them. What does this have to do with a weekly music column? Not much but I have a very dark memory of a Mardi Gras parade many years ago when a shooting erupted and seeing what bullet holes look like in children up close, and I honestly felt like I had to inject myself into this conversation because enough is enough. As the Manic Street Preachers said in the single of the same name — quoting a leftie poster from the Spanish Civil War — "If You Tolerate This Your Children Will Be Next."

And to tweak the words of the great N.W.A., "Fuck the NRA."

Have a safe week.

Thursday

It's going to be a night of intricate low-fi rock exploding into artful blasts of pop splendor at The Outer Space, when Los Angeles and ANTI- Records' own Girlpool turn on the bright lights. Supported by the likeminded — though noisier — Special Explosion from Seattle and local queer punk kids Slop this show starts at 6:30 p.m. but I would get there earlier because the buzz hitting my ears suggests this one's gonna sell out ($10).

If the above likely scenario does occur and you still find yourself fiending for a fantastic Arcata show, might I suggest a free soiree at the Griffin tonight at 9 p.m.? Accordion/washboard/guitar and tambourine two-piece Cats Meow play a folk-tinged alternative country set that travels just as good by sea or land. Dead Bird Sons shuffles out some bluegrass tunes, too. Is there a connection between a griffin, a cat's meow and some dead bird sons? I dunno, ask the players yourself.

Friday

It's the end of the work week and the beginning of that all-too-brief recess we call the weekend, so let's not waste any time — or money — and go straight to the inexpensive thrills with two $5 dance options. Over at Humbrews at 9 p.m. it's the ninth installment of Soul Party and this edition promises groovy vinyl revolutions curated by DJ Red, Jaymorg and Funky T-Rex, with help from East One and Philly Fresh. Proper.

An hour later and a few feet closer to sea level, The Miniplex presents Samba-monium 4, an electronic/live drum hybrid of Brazilian dance music powered by the twin talents of DJ Pandemonium and Samba Floresta. The cover charge is a donation for Planned Parenthood affiliate Spare Change, so shake the sand out of your pockets for a good cause.

Saturday

Local rhythm generating sextet Timbata has an 8 p.m. show at the Arcata Playhouse ($15). Featuring Humboldt State music program alums and professors, Timbata is a favorite on the scene, noted for its finely crafted Latin and Afro-Cuban beats inspired by the musical panoply that is the legacy of the Caribbean/African diaspora.

Motherlode, the best funk band in the county, is celebrating the release of a new EP tonight at Humbrews. The show kicks off around 9 p.m., although who knows when the 10-piece will assemble on the stage. I will bet they play until closing time, though. Seattle's Klozd Sirkut joins the fun as well ($10).

Cats Meow plays the Griffin on Thursday, Feb. 22 at 9 p.m.

And rounding out this Saturday is Boise's dark duo The Sun and The Mirror, playing an ambient metallic set at The Alibi. (11 p.m.). Whitethorn's only black metal band worth seeing Zelosis pads out the bill nicely and for $5 this show is a steal.

Sunday

Arcata Pirate Radio presents an all-ages benefit show at The Jam today for Big Brothers Big Sisters of the North Coast. (2 p.m.) Join the all-local cast of rockers Lord Ellis, stoners Ultramafic and one-man punk band The Bored Again for a daytime blitzkreig bop bounce-house for the kiddies young and not so young ($5-$20 sliding scale).

The Siren's Song hosts Grocery Outlit and The Monster Women as both bands support Los Angeles' Burger Records-signed psyche rock group Feels tonight at 9 p.m. (price TBA).

Monday

It's the free bluegrass jam at Redwood Curtain Brewing Co. again this evening. Come on down to the marsh around 6 p.m. for some pickin' and grinnin'.

Tuesday

It's a singer-songwriter night of sorts at the Outer Space as Portland's Sunbathe is supported by local tune-smiths. Blood Honey is the stage name of Ariel Fishkin, whose tunes have a bluesy and sad cadence, while Skyler McCormick and her unstoppable synth-flavored ukulele is Mother Munchie. Sleeper.Wav rounds out the team with acoustic experimentation.

And $7 at 7 p.m. is the deal.

Chris Wood, bassist extraordinaire and one third of modern jazz powerhouse Medeski, Martin and Wood, is also one third — with guitarist brother Oliver and multi-instrumentalist Jano Rix — of roots rock and country act The Wood Brothers, who play the Kate Buchanan Room at 8 p.m. Expect a lively display of godlike musicianship ($36/$15 students).

Wednesday

I was going to suggest going to the Old Steeple to check out the folk stylings of Greg Brown but it looks like that act is sold out. So let me hit you with two free shows and a curve ball. Local jazz trio RLA plays the Mad River Brewery Tasting Room with a little help from singer Paula Jones and Don Baraka on the sax at 6 p.m. And a half an hour later over at the Palm Lounge, singer and trombonist (tromboner is a much more psychically satisfying term to me but whatever) James Zeller jams with his jazz trio.

Finally, beginning around 6 p.m. and for a mere $5 beverage or food minimum, the Arcata Theatre Lounge is playing the movie Blade. Not a music event you say? Fair enough but the soundtrack to this first film starring a black superhero from the Marvel Universe is an absolutely precious artifact of the late '90s hip hop/ techno landscape featuring heavy cuts by Mobb Deep, Bounty Killer, Gang Starr and DJ Krush, among others. Maybe pre-game a viewing of Black Panther with this gem from 20 years ago and marvel at how far we have come.

Collin Yeo has no problem saying what he said about the NRA to gun activists in person or on paper. He lives in Arcata.

Blade

Fang Club

Before Black Panther pounced from the comic page to the big screen, another black superhero from the Marvel universe blessed us with a trilogy of movies, starting with the eponymous Blade (1998). Three things you should know about this film: 1) It’s showing at the Arcata Theatre Lounge on Wednesday, Feb. 28 at 6 p.m. (free with $5 food or beverage purchase). 2) It’s genius. 3) I will fight anyone on that last thing.

Let me explain: It’s Wesley Snipes as a samurai sword-wielding half vampire who’s immune to sunlight and hunts the undead, assisted by a wiry, whiskey-swilling Kris Kristofferson. How are you not going to show up for that? Snipes — with a flat-top fade, tribal tattoos, leather duster and wraparound sunglasses — deploys his signature staccato martial arts moves, sword and boomerang thing to mow down the vamps at blood-drenched undead raves and elaborate lairs. It’s the anti-Twilight and nobody sparkles, least of all Stephen Dorff’s evil vampire tech-bro, with his cheesy five o’clock shadow and nefarious plans to overthrow humans and the stuffy vampire establishment by resurrecting an uber-bloodsucker. And, of course, a human hematologist (N’Bushe Wright) gets caught up in the blood feud.

We’ve been blessed with sequels, of course — you don’t make just one African-American samurai vampire movie. But this is your chance to see the original on the big screen, full of deadpan quips, pre-Matrix bullet dodging and Snipes practicing the lost art of stock-still badassery. Who does a girl have to exsanguinate for Blade 4?

Black Panther Goes Big

Oscar nominated shorts offer tiny gems

By John J. Bennett

Reviews

BLACK PANTHER. It seems important, maybe necessary, to set a few things straight: I hope Black Panther breaks all of the records, that it somehow financially bankrupts the already creatively and ethically destitute elements of the movie industry, that it creates broad, sweeping change in media, in attitudes and in our national conversation. The movie is a good and a powerful thing, a cultural phenomenon long overdue and a vital addition to the Marvel Cinematic Universe, wherein lies my conflict: Black Panther is every inch a Marvel Movie and I'm kinda tired of them.

I'll readily admit that I likely overburdened the movie with my expectations. Director Ryan Coogler's earlier features (Fruitvale Station, 2013 and Creed, 2015) moved me with their sympathy toward their characters, their narrative even-handedness and disproportionately mature marriage of style and story. Fruitvale marked Coogler as an artist on the rise, someone who belongs behind a movie camera telling stories. And Creed confirmed the first movie wasn't a fluke produced by a confluence of passions and current events. When I learned he was attached to Black Panther, I was heartily pleased but not surprised.

One of the few things big movie houses seem to be getting right lately is the hiring of "young"/"indie" directors to helm tent-pole entries: Colin Trevorrow on Jurassic World, Rian Johnson on The Last Jedi, Ryan Fleck and Anna Boden on the upcoming Captain Marvel. Never mind Trevorrow being fired from directing the next Star Wars or the same fate befalling Phil Lord and Chris Miller on Solo, or Gareth Edwards having "help" foisted on him to finish Rogue One. Two steps forward, however many steps back.

Coogler had established himself as a

Happy Presidents' Week.

Black Panther

director ready for the big show and the introduction of Chadwick Boseman as Prince T'Challa of Wakanda/Black Panther in Captain America: Civil War (2016) signalled an imminent solo outing. And here it is, a solid and singular superhero picture replete with CGI and oversized set pieces; it's entirely on me for wanting it to be something different.

An animated sequence first describes the formation of Wakanda, an African nation founded by an uneasy armistice among factions brought together by a meteorite-borne lode of vibranium, the strongest element in the universe (from which Captain America's shield was formed). Vibranium becomes the source of Wakanda's vast wealth, fueling its mind-boggling technological advancements and enabling it to withdraw from international trade behind a veil of false poverty. After the death of his father, King T'Chaka (John Kani), T'Challa ascends to the throne and is thrust into a conflict to recover and contain stolen vibranium artifacts. This leads to war for control of the country against foes at home, abroad and from the past.

The highlights of Black Panther — the flashbacks to Oakland, circa 1992, a casino heist spilling into a car chase through Busan, South Korea — are exhilarating and emotional, with some innovative approaches to the action. But weighed down as they are by sections of stodgy dialogue and the inevitable, oversized climactic battle, their impact, along with their promise of something apart from the comic book norm, recedes into the background.

Black Panther is still one of the more interesting, dynamic characters so far in the MCU and the movie bearing his name does nothing to diminish that. Michael B. Jordan (Coogler's constant collaborator) stretches out as a villain, as does Andy Serkis, and both seize the opportunity with ferocious exuberance. At heart, Black Panther has a fascinating, nuanced story to tell and tells it well, but some of it is lost in the unnecessary noise. PG13. 134M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK, MINOR.

OSCAR NOMINATED SHORTS. I generally have mixed feelings about the mixed bag of shorts recognized by the Academy each year. On one hand, they can offer the most vivid, intense shot of movie-craft one is likely to see in a given year. Unburdened by "the system," by studio notes and mandatory test screenings, shorts can get right to the expression of a vision and to the excitement and engagement that define the best of the medium. At the same time, I'm always left wondering how many worthy experiments, how many little shots of brilliance we aren't seeing because they haven't been anointed by a popularity-obsessed sanctioning body, or because they weren't the beneficiaries of lavish funding.

It's probably not a question worth laboring over. Instead, we should relish the rare opportunity to get a look at some noteworthy short form cinema, quite a variety of which is on offer here.

The animated shorts are, as usual, a fun and breezy enterprise, ranging from a Kobe Bryant's five-minute love letter to the game that made him rich to a near half-hour adaptation of Roald Dahl's twisted take on some classic fairytales, with some Pixar and some heart-rending meditations on love and loss folded in. The live-action entries lean into the politics of the day, addressing violence and exclusion (the Australian entry being the lone comedic outlier) with varying degrees of subtlety, but all arriving at the necessity for compassion and greater understanding. The documentaries, to even more heartbreaking effect, offer a sort of aggregate image of "where we are now," with stories of elder abuse, the overdose capital of America and ex-cons making good, among others. MINIPLEX, MINOR.

THE PHANTOM THREAD. Paul Thomas Anderson directs Daniel Day-Lewis and Vicky Krieps in a romance about a couturier who falls in love with his muse. Immersive settings, costumes and a nuanced story reward the viewer's patience. R. 130M. MINOR.

THE SHAPE OF WATER. Guillermo del Toro's exquisite love story/fable/tribute to monster movies of yesteryear showcases its stellar cast, including Sally Hawkins as a mute woman who falls in love with an amphibian (Doug Jones) and Michael Shannon as an evil scientist. R. 123M. BROADWAY, MINOR.

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF JAMES WESLEY GLEATON aka WES GLEATON aka JAMES W. (etc) CASE NO. PR180019

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, of JAMES WESLEY GLEATON aka WES GLEATON aka JAMES W. (etc) A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner HOLLY JAYE GLEATON

In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that HOLLY JAYE GLEATON be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent. THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A HEARING on the petition will be held on March 1, 2018 at 2:00 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 4.

IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

Perpetual Motion Machines

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

Around the year 1180, an Indian mathematician, Bhaskara II, invented what is generally claimed to be the world's first perpetual motion machine. It was a vertical wheel with mercury-filled tubes attached to the rim; as the wheel turned, mercury flowed to the lowest parts of the tubes, maintaining the rotation indefinitely — you can see a modern version of Bhaskara wheel's action on YouTube. The free energy thus generated can solve today's energy crisis! No more coal and oil polluting the atmosphere and warming the planet! No more messy gas or diesel engines on our roads! Simply scale up Bhaskara's wheel and enjoy a Golden Age of Energy.

If only. I'll leave it to you to figure out how the wheel in the video keeps turning, but even if you don't watch it, you already know it's a scam, right? From Bhaskara on down to the present time, inventors have been presenting the world with perpetual motion machines, that is, machines whose output — in this case, a revolving axle that could be used to generate electricity — exceeds its input. No energy goes in, some energy comes out. And bang goes the First Law of Thermodynamics. Remember? Energy can be neither created nor destroyed, aka there's no free lunch. Perhaps that should be amended: the only free lunches are eaten by inventors who are able to con rubes into investing in their "free energy" machines. (Next up: automobiles that run on water.)

A 20th century version of Bhaskara's Wheel is shown in the "mass leverage" contraption above, in which the metal balls on the right have more leverage than those on the left, creating perpetual rotation. Except four balls on the right (in this case) are counterbalanced by five on the left. More to the point — and common to all "wheel" types of perpetual motion machines — the center of gravity of the moving part is lower than the central axle, meaning that once started, it will end up swinging to and fro like a pendulum before friction causes it to stop.

But wait, I've been talking about perpetual motion machines. What about just plain perpetual motion, that is, something that keeps moving eternally without doing any actual work? Isn't that possible? 'Fraid

Norman Rockwell's 1920 Popular Science cover shows a modern version of Bhaskara's Wheel, c. 1180. Can you see why it can't work? Hint: Where's its center of gravity?

Public domain

not. Now we're up against the Second Law of Thermodynamics that says — for our purposes — that a closed system can never run at 100 percent efficiency, no matter what (aka, you can't even break even).

Meaning that nothing works forever, whether it's a pendulum (losing energy though friction of its pivot and of air molecules), a "drinking bird" toy (which runs until all the water is evaporated), Earth spinning in space (kinetic energy of which is constantly being lost to tidal friction, hence the insertion of 27 "leap seconds" since 1972) or a hydrogen atom (whose single proton, half-life 10<sup>33</sup> years, will — eventually — decay).

None of which is going to stop inventors trying to outwit the laws of thermodynamics — look no further than YouTube if you don't believe me. Little has changed since Leonardo da Vinci bemusedly wrote, more than 500 years ago: "Oh ye seekers after perpetual motion, how many vain chimeras have you pursued? Go and take your place with the alchemists."

Barry Evans (barryevans9@yahoo.com) hopes he doesn't lose any more friends by insisting that their pet "free energy" project can't work.

#stonedinhumboldt

Quickly becoming one of the most popular local Facebook groups, #stonedinhumboldt started in June of 2017 with the purpose of bringing joy to the community through rock painting. Now with more than 7,000 members of all ages, this private Facebook group paints and leaves stones all over Humboldt County. "We love seeing the community come together and this is a fun and easy way for families and friends to spend time with each other," explains founder Kristy Clark. "We also sponsor many local non-profits, such as Toys for Tots and the Breast Health Project and do different things to support them. To us the community is the most important thing and it is important for us to give back."

Murphy's will be joining #stonedinhumboldt in the month of March by hiding 25 stones (five per store) at all the Murphy's locations. If found, they can be redeemed in store for a specific prize.

For more information on #stonedinhumboldt or for more information on joining, check out their Facebook page. #stonedinhumboldt is open to all ages and all skill levels. They would also like to thank Murphy's Markets for all of their support.
